called a mass meeting. Even the co-eds went, just to see the fun. It was an indignation meeting. There was a great deal of fuss and words were plenty. "Never will we submit to the tyrannical yoke of the sophmore class," said President Cannon, while his cohorts gathered about him, cheering frantically. Even the co-eds chimed in and said they would never, never speak to those horrid sophe mores. It was a great moment for the freshman class. To show the sophomore that they were ready to throw down the gauntlet they made arrangements to issue a proclamation of their own, defying the phomores to do their worst. But it was a still greater moment for the sophomores. Led by R. W. Argo and Alvin M Brown, fifty of their most stalwart warriors were in hiding when the first freshman, scenting danger, peeped out of the door. There was not a person
